V. 2. Citations and Explanations:

Claims 1-7, 9-25, 27, and 31-32 lack novelty under PCT Article 33(2) as being anticipated by Russo (US 5,619,247 A).

Regarding claim 1, Russo discloses a media system comprising: logic configured to provide a user interface that provides a user with a plurality of media content selections available at various times (the subscribers may choose to purchase the near-video-on-demand feature, pay per view); and a portable client media drive configured to receive over a secured transmission medium the media content selected by the user (a program storage records onto removable cassettes as shown by block 132; enabling the user to play pre-recorded or record the selected programs) (see col. 7, lines 35-61; col. 8, lines 41-54; col. 4, lines 28-44).

Regarding claim 2, Russo shows that a subscriber network television system in electrical communication with the portable media drive (132) and a television (8) (see figures 1-2).

Regarding claims 3-4, Russo discloses that the broadband cable system provides the video program services to cable converter box (see col. 3, lines 46-48).

Regarding claim 5, Russo discloses a hard disk drive (112) that receives the media content and transfers the media content to the portable media drive (132) (see figure 2).

Regarding claim 6, Russo discloses a memory (110) that receives the media content selected by the user (see figure 2).

Regarding claim 7, Russo discloses a memory (112) that receives the media content and transfers the media content to the portable media drive (see figure 2).

Regarding claim 9, Russo shows the user interface is provided by a remote server (broadband cable system 2 - see figure 2). Regarding claim 10, Russo discloses a processor (150) and a memory (156), wherein the processor is configured with the memory to provide the user interface (see col. 9, lines 24-51).

Regarding claim 11, Russo discloses a processor to access secured media content over the secured transmission medium (bus 152 - see figure 2).

Regarding claim 12, Russo discloses that the portable media drive comprises at least one portable medium (cassette, CD-ROM) (see col. 7, lines 44-47; col. 8, lines 44-47).

Regarding claim 13, it is noted that the portable media drive inherently comprises a carousel media drive to store tape or disc.

Regarding claim 14, it is noted that the portable media drive comprises a magazine drive to hold the tape or disc.

Regarding claim 15, Russo discloses a television display showing the user interface (see col. 3-4, lines 51-9).

Regarding claim 16, Russo discloses a method for recording media content, comprising the steps of: providing a user interface to select from a plurality of media content selections available at different times (the subscribers may choose to purchase the near-video-on-demand feature, pay per view); receiving from a remote device the selected media content over a secured transmission medium; and recording the selected media content onto at least one portable medium (a program storage records onto removable cassettes as shown by block 132; enabling the user to play pre-recorded or record the selected programs) (see col. 7, lines 35-61; col.

8, lines 41-54; col. 4, lines 28-44).

Regarding claim 17, Russo shows that a subscriber network television system in electrical communication with the portable media drive (132) and a television (8) (see figures 1-2).

Regarding claims 18-19, Russo discloses that the broadband cable system provides the video program services to cable converter box (see col. 3, lines 46-48).

Regarding claim 20, Russo shows decrypting the encrypted selected media content (by descrambler 114) (see figure 2).

Regarding claim 21, Russo shows the user interface is provided by a remote server (broadband cable system 2 - see figure 2).

Regarding claim 22, Russo discloses providing the user interface from a local client device (providing on-screen menu or near-video-on-demand menu at the user terminal - see col. 4, lines 38-44).

Regarding claim 23, Russo discloses that the portable medium is located in a portable media drive (cassette, CD-ROM) (see col. 7, lines 44-47; col. 8, lines 44-47).

Regarding claim 24, Russo shows that the portable medium is coupled to a local client device (see figures 1-2).

Regarding claim 25, Russo shows the remote device is a remote server (the broadband cable system - see col. 3, lines 46-48).

Regarding claim 27, Russo discloses a hard disk drive (112) that receives the media content and transfers the media content to the portable media drive (132) (see figure 2).

Regarding claims 31-32, Russo discloses that the subscribers may choose to purchase the near-video-on-demand or pay per view, if so desired via a television terminal 8 (see col. 3, lines 51-57; col. 4, lines 40-44).

Claim 26 lack an inventive step under PCT Article 33(3) as being obvious over Russo (US 5,619,247 A).

Regarding claim 26, Russo does not disclose the remote device is a home computer. It is noted that utilizing a home computer as the consumer terminal for receiving and storing programming services such as television programs is well known in the art. Therefore, it would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to modify Russo by utilizing a home computer as consumer terminal to receive and store the programs for displaying or playback the received programs.
